While photographing during harvest season in Lancaster County, I was struck by how the Amish appear to be wedged in-between communities of modern American life. I was impressed how they were able to maintain a sense of place in their unique corner of the world. These were faces who whispered to me: "Calm down, slow down, get engaged". I did slow down, I became engaged and I began to see in new ways. Each image illustrates people who are trusting, a community that conserves and a society that chooses to not squander.
